The Inquiring Congress

The Eighty-sixth Congress, with its bulging Democratic majority, has begun its session with signal energy—notably in the field of inquiry. Committee after committee, each with a Democratic chairman, has summoned Administration leaders for sharp questioning about their past actions and future plans. Some of the outstanding encounters of recent days are shown in these photographs.

INTELLIGENCE—Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, is welcomed by Lyndon B. Johnson (D., Tex.) to a Senate Preparedness subcommittee session.
